Emmy award winning documentary filmmaker Jonathan Lewis and his team have been granted unprecedented access by the Chinese government to film across the country, including Tibet and Muslim Xinjiang, and to interview its people at every level. But while the access is official, much of what emerges is anything but. The lives of China's people are being shaped and shaken by dramatic changes: social, economic, environmental, personal. They are all striving for prosperity, but only some will benefit from it. Speaking with passion and frankness, their stories are revelatory and moving.

Contemporary China, seen through the eyes of her people. Remarkable. Unexpected. A compelling insight into China's achievements and controversies. China Inside is a landmark new series that opens the door to China's people, revealing what life is really like in this eternally fascinating country. Shot in High Definition, this ground-breaking programme shows first hand the challenges faced by 1.3 billion Chinese at a time when the eyes of the world are on their country's rapid economic growth and increasing influence.

China Inside—Power And The People

The opening episode features the political power structure of China, with incredible access to the process at all levels. The programme gets complete access to a village election, including revealing interviews with local electors, filming inside the National People's Congress and getting remarkable access to Party meetings and activities. For the first time ever, a television crew is allowed to film along the Kazakhstan border with the Chinese military, and inside prison to speak to a corrupt official reprieved from a death sentence. Interviewees also include the Governor of Xinjiang Autonomous Region and the Deputy Governor of Tibet. (56 minutes)

China Inside—Women Of The Country

Dealing with economic necessities in China means ordinary men and women are forced to make heartbreaking personal sacrifices. This emotional episode examines women's lives, fears and aspirations, highlights the pressures on women from the State's 'One Child Policy', and reveals the terrible statistic that China has the highest suicide rate for women in the world. The programme follows a migrant couple returning to their home village to see their children after a year long absence, and includes heartbreaking stories from Tibetan women as well as extraordinary coverage of a wedding that turns ugly. (56 minutes)

China Inside—Nature

China's economic growth is making headlines around the world, but at what cost to the land and its citizens? This episode examines the issue of pollution, revealing how badly polluted rivers are causing cancer in the local populations and how the drastic water shortages are leading to the biggest engineering project in world history. It will cut new rivers across China and force hundreds of thousands of people out of their homes. In the face of this, a new wave of fearless eco-warriors are risking death threats to fight for a green environment. (56 minutes)

China Inside—Freedom And Justice

How free are the Chinese people? Where can they go for justice? Startling answers take the series into Tibetan temples, law courts and Aids villages to meet aggrieved farmers, fearless campaigners, legal reformers and victims of injustice. Extraordinary scenes show growing levels of disorder as the state tries to maintain stability. Outspoken interviewees, from angry, evicted tenants to the Minister of Information wrestle with how to make China fair as well as prosperous. (56 minutes)
